Message from the Chairs

On behalf of the entire organizing team of FSE 2014, it is our great pleasure to welcome you to Hong Kong for the 22$^{nd}$ ACM SIGSOFT International Symposium on the Foundations of Software Engineering. The conference brings together researchers, practitioners, and educators to present and discuss the most recent innovations, trends, experiences, and challenges in software engineering. This year's program continues the great tradition of previous FSE meetings by being rich and exciting, but the location of the conference is particularly noteworthy as it is the first time that this major international software engineering conference is being held outside North America. Hong Kong is renowned as a lively city with a beautiful harbor and landscape, and is famous for its finance, shopping, and gourmet cuisine, blending Eastern and Western cultures.

FSE 2014 also received a record-high number of submissions, as the research track attracted 280 submissions from Asia, North America, Europe, South America, Australia, and Africa. After extensive virtual discussions, followed by a two-day face-to-face meeting, the Program Committee of 33 members accepted 61 papers that cover a variety of topics, including software testing, empirical software engineering, program analysis, software evolution and maintenance, human and social factors, and formal methods. Among those, six papers received an ACM SIGSOFT Distinguished Paper Award.

For FSE 2014, we encouraged authors to provide artifacts, such as tools or data sets, that would allow others to replicate, compare to, or extend the authors' work. The authors of 25 accepted papers provided artifacts that were then evaluated by the Artifact Evaluation Committee, chaired by Antonio Carzaniga and Prem Devanbu. Among these submissions, 15 artifacts passed the selection--these papers are suitably marked so that you can recognize them.

The FSE 2014 program offers more than just the research track. It includes a keynote speech by Monica S. Lam and two invited award talks by Alexander L. Wolf and Magne Jørgensen. It also includes: a Tool Demonstrations session, in which researchers will present state-of-the-art tools; a Student Research Competition, in which a set of selected graduate and undergraduate students will present their research work; a Visions and Challenges session, organized in cooperation with the Commuting Community Consortium, that will present visionary ideas and long term challenges and opportunities in software engineering research; and perspectives from industry that will discuss the major software engineering issues encountered by the software industry.

FSE 2014 also features eight co-located workshops and symposiums on a set of important topics: advanced modularization techniques (AOAsia/Pacific); context in software development (CSD); crowd-based software development methods and technologies (CrowdSoft); innovative software development methodologies and practices (InnoSWDev); Internetware, software development lifecycle for mobile (DeMobile); software engineering educators (SEES); and social software engineering (SSE). We thank the organizers of these co-located events for their vision and their help in making FSE successful.

Besides workshops and symposiums, the pre-conference activities include a memorial event for Mary Jean Harrold, a friend, colleague, and top software engineering researcher who passed away on September 19, 2013. The pre-conference activities also include a doctoral symposium featuring ten students and eight tutorials to discuss recent advances in software engineering, namely: the use of software analytics to assist software development; transitioning privacy from science to practice; engineering secure software; the use of symbolic techniques for program debugging and repair; automated string analysis techniques; developing cyberphysical system software; applying software engineering to cloud applications; and the use of social media.

Many people made this great event possible, so we apologize in advance if we do not mention everyone by name. We extend a special thank to the Program Committee members, who worked extremely hard to review the many submissions, discussed them extensively online, and flew to Hyderabad, India for the physical PC meeting. We are also extremely thankful to the following people: Amy Li and Yvette Lui, for solving many of the conference's local logistics problems; Andreas Follner, for his great help in setting up the online registration system; Wilma Shen, for letting the high-school students of Renaissance College in Hong Kong help our delegates with transportation; Chang Xu, for his help in liaising with financial supporters; Farrah Khan, for her help in coordinating FSE 2014; the Hong Kong Science Park Management, for letting us use their conference facilities at a discount; and Pankaj Jalote and Vasudeva Varma for helping with the logistics of the PC meeting in Hyderabad.

We would like to acknowledge ACM for the sponsorship of FSE 2014 through its Special Interest Group on Software Engineering (SIGSOFT). We also deeply thank our patrons CVIC SE, NSF, Microsoft Research, Huawei, Neusoft, Siemens, Yonyou, The Hong Kong University of Science and Technology, Google, Radica, Samsung Research America, IBM Research, TCL, and CCC for their generous financial support. With this sponsorship, financial support, and many contributions from members of the software engineering community, we are happy to present to you an exciting and rich program with ideas that we are sure will have great impact and will foster progress in software engineering worldwide.

FSE 2014 has a record-high number of registrations: 342 from 26 countries or regions (as of the second week of October 2014). The majority of these registrations are from Asia (54%), North America (26%), and Europe (18%). About 35% of the registrations were made by students, and about 11% of non-student registrations were made by delegates from industry. Finally, we want to thank all of the conference attendees for contributing to making FSE 2014 a success. We hope that you will find the program interesting, thought-provoking, and inspiring, and that the conference will give you valuable opportunities to share ideas with researchers and practitioners from the vibrant software engineering community.

Omlet: A Revolution against Big-Brother Social Networks (Invited Talk)

Monica S. Lam   (Stanford University, USA)

With the wide-spread adoption of proprietary social networks like Facebook and mobile chat platforms like Wechat, we may be heading to a future where all our communication are monetized and our online transactions are mediated by monopolistic big-data companies. This talk describes a new anti-data monetization movement led by Omlet, an open messaging service and distributed computing platform that spun out of 4 years of research at Stanford University. With Omlet, (1) users can own their data and have them hosted on cloud services of their choice and (2) distributed "p2p webapps" enable phones and other internet of things to interact with each other without having its communication be monetized. Introduced in March 2014, Omlet is already seeing traction, as it is being distributed on millions of Android phones, by Asus and other yet-to-be-announced device makers. This paradigm shift to decentralized computation not only safeguards users' data privacy, it fosters open competition and innovation, and provides an efficient and scalable foundation to handle the billions of phones and devices. Software engineering researchers can help make this a reality by making distributed mobile app development on such a platform accessible.
